

SUPPLEMENTAL INFORMATION

Antibacterial Alumochitin Thin Films Grown by Molecular Layer Deposition

Karina Ashurbekova <sup>a</sup>, Kristina Ashurbekova <sup>c</sup>, Arbresha Muriqi <sup>d</sup>, Leire Barandiaran Larrea <sup>a</sup>, Borja Alonso Lerma <sup>a</sup>, Iva Šarić <sup>e</sup>, Evgenii Modin <sup>a</sup>, Raul Perez-Jimenez <sup>a,b</sup>, Mladen Petravić <sup>e</sup>, Michael Nolan <sup>d</sup>, Mato Knez <sup>a,b</sup>

<sup>a</sup> CIC nanoGUNE, Tolosa Hiribidea 76, Donostia-San Sebastián E-20018, Spain.

<sup>b</sup> IKERBASQUE, Basque Foundation for Science, Plaza Euskadi 5, Bilbao 48009.

<sup>c</sup> Dagestan State University, Makhachkala 36700, Russian Federation.

<sup>d</sup> Tyndall National Institute, University College Cork, Lee Maltings, Dyke Parade, Cork T12 R5CP, Ireland.

<sup>e</sup> Department of Physics and Centre for Micro- and Nanosciences and Technologies, University of Rijeka, 51000 Rijeka, Croatia.

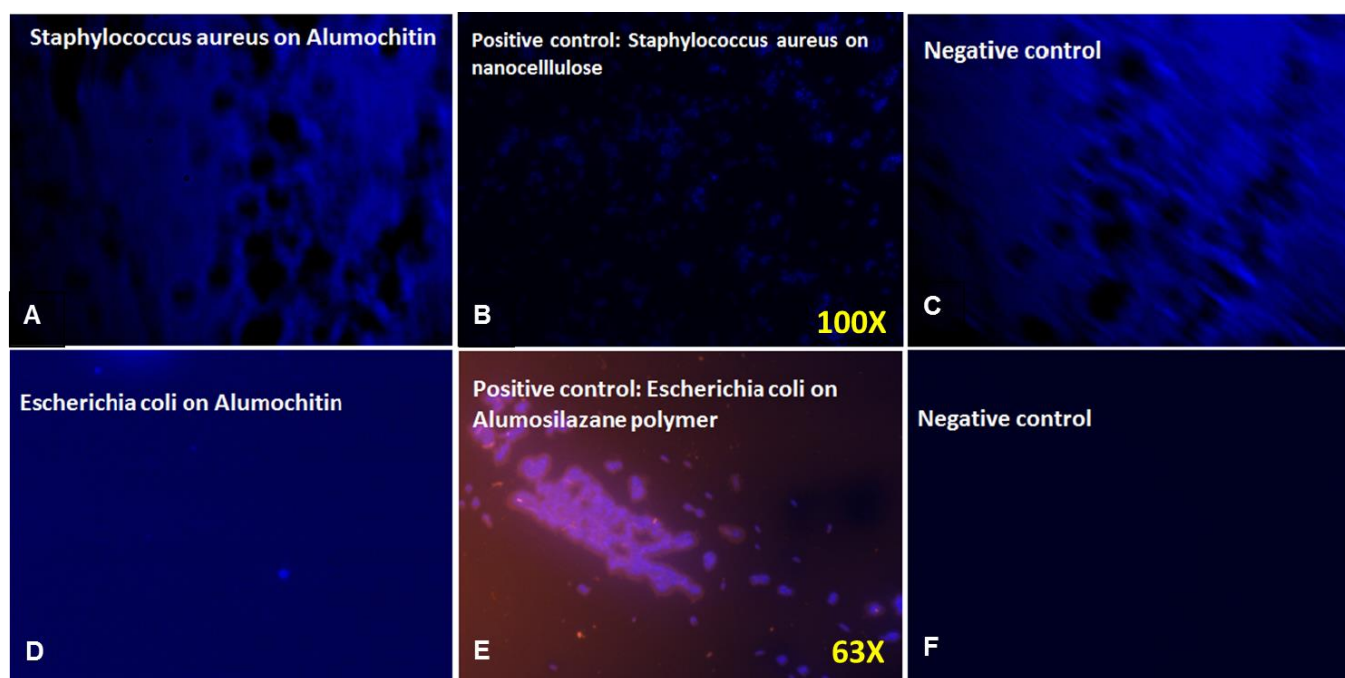

Figure 1S. Confocal microscopy images of Staphylococcus aureus (A–C) and E. coli (D–F) bacteria on Alumochitin thin films, grown on glass substrates, after 24h. Positive control: Crystalline nanocellulose (B) and alumosilazane (E) films.

This project has received funding from the European Union's Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme under the Marie Skłodowska -Curie grant agreement No 765378.